High Living Room Space in Houses

Author

Kliment Ivanov

The high living room space is the most impressive form of private residential space. It is a manifestation of design excellence within the boundaries of the single-family house.

The complex three-dimensional composition of the high space opens a new realm for display of the creative talent of the architects. It provides a new direction in the development of the residential space – in elevation. The interior space becomes larger, richer, and grander, without an increase in the built-up area. It opens new impressive exterior views and surprising interior angles.

The high space is an opulent and luxurious scheme, regardless whether it is in a grand mansion or a humble house. It impresses deeply and leaves long-lasting memories in those who visit it. This type of space has enormous potential for improvement both in the quality of life and the dwelling experience.

This volume presents a research on the contemporary notion of the high living room space throughout the world and its role in the modern dwelling. It is regarded as the most important innovation in the development of the modern house and one of the key elements of its creation. The aim is not to impose it as a universally applicable solution that will oust the others. It is an alternative scheme, suitable for more avant-garde clients who look for a different organisation of life in their houses. This makes the spatial scheme especially desirable by clients from the creative and artistic circles.
